Leads strategic visions for university values, related behaviors, and the identification of key systems and processes shaping and reinforcing culture. Oversees daily operations of all culture-related programs, applying structured methodology to lead transformation/change management activities.
Oversees high-profile culture-related projects from senior leadership (e.g., Office of the President, Office of the Provost). Provides strategic insight and recommendations for addressing challenges across the university and in high-profile matters.
Influences staff/academic leaders shaping desired culture, planning and developing key projects and engaging the entire university community - faculty, staff and students. Partners with leadership in core areas impacting culture (e.g., diversity, equity, inclusion), expressing concerns and wellbeing. Serves as university representative on boards and working groups related to key focus areas.
Develops and implements strategic change management plans focused on enhancing and promoting culture based on unifying values and ethical decision-making. Designs and develops analytics to measure the acceptance of unifying values, diversity, equity, and inclusion, and the general state of culture throughout the university.
Engages, develops, and grows a large network of culture and value champions, providing coaching and leadership to support change efforts. Partners with relevant stakeholders (e.g., ethics and compliance staff, Working Group on University Culture) to set clear goals for initiatives.
Leads a team working on immediate and larger, long-term culture goals. Manages workloads and redistributes resources as required. Maintains open lines of communication with direct reports to understand existing challenges and discuss improvement opportunities. Builds action plans for cross-functional areas to address issues and feedback.
Connects faculty, staff, and students with senior administrators, policymakers, and relevant thought-leadership opportunities. Promotes an environment that fosters inclusive relationships and creates unbiased opportunities for contributions through ideas, words, and actions that uphold principles of the USC Code of Ethics.
